MAINE STATE SENATOR

Expanding Telehealth: Getting Government Out of the Way

Maine State Senator Trey Stewart represents Aroostook County, the northernmost county in the Lower 48. Some of his constituents have to spend hours or even days traveling just to access quality health care—which is why he advocates in the Maine legislature for expanding telehealth options in the state.

Here, Senator Stewart discusses why it's important to get the government out of the way and improve access to health care by expanding telehealth options.

“When the government tries to fit everybody into the same box...outcomes go down. And patients suffer.”
