West Virginia Secretary of State on Maintaining Voter Confidence

Mac Warner serves West Virginia as the Secretary of State. On his watch, West Virginia ranked in the top five percent for voter confidence.

Here, Secretary Warner discusses how important it is for all voters, regardless of party, to have confidence in elections. He tells about a situation in his state where an election was decided by only four votes, pointing out that there doesn't have to be widespread voter fraud—any amount of voter fraud is improper.

“If voter confidence drops off, then participation drops off, and that’s what makes our whole democracy work.”
