Indiana Senator Mike Braun on bringing hope to those suffering from life-threatening illnesses

The drug approval process often takes 10 to 12 years. But Americans suffering from serious or life-threatening illnesses don't have that kind of time.

That's why Senator Mike Braun (IN) introduced the Promising Pathway Act. Here, Sen. Braun and Rep. Mike Gallagher (WI) discuss how this legislation would shorten the drug approval process by streamlining the process for clinical trials and experimental treatments. This change will give those suffering from serious illnesses hope and options.

"All the people that are out there, just trying to hang on to hope, are willing to risk doing something that may be different from what the FDA has always done. We want to compress that process to make it more agile, more responsive."
