Missouri State Representative Dean Plocher: We need to incentivize people to get back to work

With proper checks and balances in our election system, while removing barriers to work, people can focus on what matters most to them.

Here, State Representative Dean Plocher discusses his belief in the importance of public service and that the state of Missouri is well-positioned to be a leader in the country. He points out that by protecting people from burdensome regulations, preserving welfare for those truly in need, and ensuring trust in our election system through checks and balances, government can get out of the way of Americans growing their families and living their lives.

“We need to incentivize people to get back to work. Let’s try and help people get back in the workforce and do their best.”
