

Regulation Without Representation

What happens when you get regulation without representation? The size of government expands while you, the taxpayer, foot the bill. Under President Biden, the cost of new regulations grew by $200 billion in just his first year in office. It's time to end the practice of handing blank checks to unelected Washington bureaucrats—Congress must act now to return power to the people by requiring legislative approval of costly new regulations.

The Regulations from the Executive in Need of Scrutiny Act (REINS) would put a cap on regulatory abuse. The answer is simple—require legislative approval of costly regulations and put a cap on government overreach.

"In his first year of presidency, Biden added $200 billion in new, costly regulations. This is more costly than the biggest tax increase Democrats have ever pushed through Congress."

For more information on the REINS Act, visit TheFGA.org/reins-act.

Watch the full video at:
TheFGA.org/videos

