Why does Jen love FGA?

"FGA is a family of amazing individuals who are all working toward one goal: Making America the best it can be by providing opportunities for people to work and become proud, contributing members of society. I love that through FGA, I can be part of the solution."

Jen Libby is the senior designer at the Foundation for Government Accountability, where she provides diverse and creative graphic design support for the organization's projects and priorities.

Prior to joining FGA, she was the creative director at Mix Maine Media and the senior designer and website developer at Marshall Communications. She holds a Bachelor of Applied Science in Graphic Design and Multimedia from Westwood College in Denver, Colorado. She is passionate about creating meaningful design in order to help organizations like FGA put forth the most professional collateral possible.

Jen first experienced the power of work while working at a local convenience store making subs and pizza. To her, the power of work means being self-sufficient and helping to take care of your family. Work is one of the ways people help contribute to their communities. It's a lesson she learned as a child helping her family with chores, and a lesson imparted on her own children.

A fan of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and the New England Patriots, Jen and her family live in Winslow, Maine.
