Iowa Attorney General Brenna Bird on ESG

ESG (environmental, social, and governance) policies don't grow anything, and they don't build anything—they only tear things down. Iowa Attorney General Brenna Bird grew up in agriculture, so she knows the difference between growth and destruction. She calls ESG what it is: A subversive plan to impose liberal principles on us without our consent, and sometimes even without our knowledge.

“Because of what ESG does to agriculture, there really is no place within the ESG movement for someone to be a farmer. And that’s a real problem, because without farmers, we don’t eat.”
