Why does Addison love FGA?

“FGA provides tangible solutions to preserve the values of hard work and personal freedom from government dependency.”

Addison Scherler is a Data Investigator at the Foundation for Government Accountability.

Prior to joining FGA, she worked as a Research Intern for the Mises Institute for Austrian Economics. She also interned on Capitol Hill for Rep. Pete Sessions (TX) and Senator Rand Paul (KY). She holds a Bachelor of Science in Economics from Auburn University.

Addison first experienced the value of work while working on her family's farming and grain merchandising operation. To her, work promotes a sense of responsibility for your successes and failures, both of which enable personal growth. Hard work creates an opportunity to achieve the American Dream and contribute to society as a whole.

When she's not working, Addison loves traveling the world, hiking, and going on runs. A fan of the Auburn Tigers, Addison lives in Dallas, TX.
