Why does Tyler love FGA?

"Without ambition one starts nothing. Without work one finishes nothing. FGA understands the value of work and promotes this value to help millions achieve their American Dream."

Tyler Lamensky is the State Affairs Manager at the Foundation for Government Accountability (FGA), where he manages internal systems and coordination efforts for the government affairs teams.

Prior to joining FGA, Tyler held several positions serving the State of Maine, including acting director of boards and commissions for the Office of Governor Paul R. LePage, project manager for strategic initiatives for the Department of Health and Human Services in the Office of the Commissioner, and IT project consultant for the Office of Information Technology. He holds a B.S. in Psychology and Philosophy from Millikin University.

Tyler first experienced the value of work mowing lawns. To him, work means empowering individuals to reach great accomplishments and grow into their better, self-sufficient selves.

When he's not working, Tyler enjoys biking, hiking, camping, playing soccer, and golf. A fan of the Green Bay Packers, the Milwaukee Bucks, and the Milwaukee Brewers, Tyler lives with his wife and daughter in Neenah, Wisconsin.
