Why does Victoria love FGA?

"FGA's multi-state and national approach to welfare, health care, and work policy is uniquely focused on helping millions to experience the life-changing power of work."

Victoria Eardley is the Marketing Director at the Foundation for Government Accountability, where she leads the creative, digital, and distribution operation, devising and executing strategies to market FGA's mission toward target audiences.

Prior to her tenure at FGA, Victoria operated as an independent contractor, specializing in policy research and collaborating with various policy groups within the conservative communications and public relations sector. Victoria holds a Master of Arts in Public Interest Communications from the University of Florida and a Bachelor of Arts in Applied Communications and Political Science from Cedarville University.

Pairing her talents with her passion for serving others, Victoria is driven to help others end the cycle of dependency, create security for their families, and pursue the American Dream. Her work has been featured in The Wall Street Journal, The Dallas Morning News, USA Today, The Federalist, National Review, and more.

When she's not working, Victoria dedicates her time to running, reading, and volunteering at her local church and pregnancy resource center. A member of Prestonwood Baptist Church and a Florida Gator fan, Victoria and her husband, John, reside in North Dallas, Texas.
